COUNTRY CALLING IN DARK TONES

A young Taiwanese family opts for darker colours, rustic materials and a country-inspired interior for their three-bedroom apartment. Interior design firm Carpenters then elevated the look by bringing a sense of warmth and cosiness to the home.

Rustic country

This condominium apartment takes its inspiration from cosy, countryside homes, but focuses specifically on the warm, rustic elements. As such, granite walls, heavysset bricks and dark wood make up most of the material palette. In fact, the feature wall in the living room is almost entirely covered in granite; even the beams on the ceiling are meant to mimic barnyards rafters.

Dining in

The rustic industrial look continues into the dining area, where textures and materials play important roles. The rough-hewn brick wall acts as a backdrop for family meals, while the suspended utilitarian lamp anchors the area. As with the rest of the home, a subdued colour scheme encourages the homeowners to feel relaxed.

Gather around

The kitchen is one of the highlights in this home. It's an open-concept space that encourages family and friends to gather around the kitchen island. Wood veneer clad the cabinet fronts, and they are paired with a granite countertop. The resulting look is a communal kitchen that becomes the heart of the home.

Stone wash

Even the bathroom continues the home's rustic aesthetic. Here, shades of cement grey and aged wood are paired together to great effect. Thanks to the bathroom's tall windows, natural light filters into the space and enlivens the area.

Rough night

This bedroom has been designed to be the optimal room for rest and relaxation. The homeowners' preference for darker tones alludes to the decidedly laidback and sensual mood of the room. The textures also play an important role, especially with the custom-designed headboard. It is made from a slate grey material, with strips of wood that play up the height of this room.

THE BRIEF

The fashionable family of four staying in this three-bedroom condominium apartment hail from Taiwan, and they brought their distinct aesthetic preference to their new home. Desiring a calm, subdued and understated abode, the family took their inspiration from countryside manors, focusing on darker colour tones and heavy textures.

Granite, stone and wood are used prominently throughout the apartment, giving the home a unique layering of textures. Even the colours used are duskier and more subdued. The result is an interior that emits a sense of warmth and homeliness.

A lot of renovations had to be carried out and the entire project took four months to complete. However, the extended renovation period was worth the wait as the homeowners are more than happy with their new family home.
